

I realize that telemarketing is NEVER going to be eliminated, but I have been extremely happy with the lack of annoying telephone calls from individuals representing any number of companies trying to simply "sell me something." And I certainly think that banking institutions have PLENTY of other means to contact customers and those potential customers WITHOUT annoying phone calls. I think the current Indiana "no call" law and the OPTION residents have to either place themselves ON the list or not, have worked EXTREMELY well. I seen absolutely NO REASON big corporations should be able to "lobby away" things that residents have worked to achieve through LEGAL means. Thanks! GARRY JONES
